Your lord. Hey, man! I've been teaching some local hand letter classes recently, and while I've gathered some resources for students, I decided to create a great set, a new set of hand-made brushes. These worksheets are specifically designed to help you master. Lowercase brush letter I tested them last night with a group of wonderful women (plus Little Crafter) at the local library and they were popular. Each letter has three examples for you to see, then a light-colored sample to follow with your pen, so you can feel how the upstrokes and downstrokes of that mail job, then there is about one and a half rows of space lined for you to train for yourself. So fill those lines... There are two easy ways you can use these brush character practice pages. 1. Download it to your computer, then type and use it with tombow fudenosuke brush pen is ideal to use on these pages because the tip size is the perfect match for samples However, if you wish, you can also fill rows using a double brush pen, so you practice with two different pens and different sizes. 2. Download on your iPad Pro and open it in the Procreate app if you're lucky enough to have an iPad Pro and like to make your digital characters, just open each page in Procreate, then use your Apple Pencil to track your samples and write your own. The best part about this is that you can remove and reuse as many times as you like! The only brush I use is called optical calligraphy and is available in creative markets. When you feel more comfortable with the letter, don't hesitate to use a special line to practice embellishment. There is no wrong way to use these sheets! The key is to choose what is best for you and get started. Here's where to grab them: Download Brush Lettering, lowercase practice sheet, just click on the link above and you'll see all six sheets. Each one contains 4-5 characters, so you will need to download all six for the full letter. Hope these things will help you on your mail journey! You want more? Letters are one of the skills you might want to specialize in for your Bullet Journal page. I tend to be afraid of the beautiful calligraphy people use to decorate their journal pages. Recently I worked on my letter and if you are a beginner. Be sure to see my beginner's guide to brushing letters. What I quickly realized was that the secret to better characters was absolute practice, so I did research and found a lot of free resources and printable worksheets to improve this skill. Before we dive in, though, here are the tips and materials to make sure you're ready to go with your character. Starting with the basic letters of the alphabet is quite simple. Just as you can create a brush calligraphy. Of course, it's a little harder when you start, but when you practice, you'll see things easier. Several main tips for brush letters are: Hold your pen at a 45-degree angle. Lift the pen after each stroke. The letters are not written, so it's okay to lift a brush to help you create a better looking character. Take your time There is no rush to spend your time when you send a letter and make sure you put an idea to your letter. I will definitely learn the letters well, I definitely advise you to start from the brush font guide for beginners.
